2.8 Agdez Detention Center

This detention center, which is located in the Legulaui Palace in the city of Agdez, consists of a two-floor, 6,500 m² bunker. It was constructed in 1948 of sand, similar to the Legloui palaces in the region.

The French authorities utilized the center during the colonial period. During the 1960s, it was used by residents to celebrate weddings and the festivals of Ahuach.

Beginning in 1976, it was used to hold prisoners who had been detained during the events of 1973 and were transferred from the Takounit detention center, as well as Saharawi prisoners who were interned following the wave of imprisonments that began in November of 1975. Almost 200 men and women were detained in the regions of Zak, Lebouirat, Lemsayed, Tarfaya, Goulimin, Rabat, Meknes, Asafi, Agadir, and Inzegan. The majority of them were taken in civilian vehicles to the national security headquarters in Agadir before being transferred to Agdez on July 3, 1976.

On October 23, 1980, the prisoners were transported in terrible conditions from Agdez to the Magouna detention center. They were carried in military vehicles with their feet and hands tied and their eyes blindfolded. Such conditions caused the death of one of the prisoners during transfer.

After one or two months of transfers, the center was used to hold other groups of prisoners that had been brought from Bouizakaren and different regions of the Sahara, who remained in the center until they were taken to Magouna in 1983.

2.9 Kalaat Magouna Detention Center

The Fort El Glaoui, in the city of Kalaat Magouna (Magouna Castle), is situated on a hill that dominates the city, and is the property of the Auxiliary forces.

Just inside the main entrance of the fort is an open square. On the left of the square is a large building with a number of separate rooms, with a patio in the center of each one. The prisoners transferred from Agdez on October 23, 1980, were divided among these rooms. The fort also has a more recently constructed building that was designated for the prisoners who would come later. The newer building was built similarly to the separate rooms, each of which had a patio in the middle. More than 300 prisoners – among them close to 60 women – have passed through the Kalaat Magouna center in different eras.

(final paragraph of pg. 22 and subsequent pages)

V- Regarding the elaboration of the lists:

This appendix contains the complete list of victims whose final whereabouts were previously unknown, classified according to the offenses to which they were submitted, the centers where they were imprisoned, or by group. The groups have been broken down – where possible – according to the type and date of the offense.

To begin, each group is identified with a summary of what the Task Force and the Consultative Council discovered, as well as the ordering of the members to the group.

To elaborate the facts included in this annex, the Task Force based its conclusions on the results reached by the Consultative Council or the task force according to the applications handed over by the families to the Council, the details included in the judgmental resolutions it issued or that were issued by the independent committee of reparation, the lists adopted by the human rights organisations and international organisations and the works of investigation including the testimonies of the victims and the survivors and the answers of the authorities.

VI- The list of the survivors of prolonged forced disappearance and those who died after arbitrary detention and disproportionate use of force, as well as those who were sentenced to death, classified according to the timeline of the events and the centers in which they were detained.

3. Those who died in arbitrary detention between 1961 and 1992 – a total of 191 people, among them 14 children and 11 women:

During its mandate, the Institution Justice and Reconciliation organized closed-door interviews with the participation of victims of arbitrary arrest from the largest and most infamous centers. The participants were selected based upon previously established criteria. The interviews were arranged with the following objectives in mind:

- Investigate the circumstances surrounding the arbitrary arrest and the mistreatment involved in them, especially physical and psychological torture.
- Collect information regarding the names of those who died in these centers and the circumstances surrounding their deaths.

The interviews allowed for the comparison among the lists published by the associations, the claims placed before the Task Force that correspond to the same time period, and the facts included in the responses from security forces. Furthermore, the activities of the Follow-Up Committee allowed for the discovery of the whereabouts of pending cases of the disappeared, as well as the verification of their deaths during detention.

The Consultative Council has information on the places where many of the following victims have been buried. The resolutions published by the Task Force and the Follow-Up Committee include recommendations to the government to continue all necessary means to identify the places of burial and inform the concerned relatives.

The following is the definitive list of those who died, classified according to the cause of death, the center of detention, and the year of death:

4. Victims of prolonged forced disappearances

During its mandate, the Justice and Reconciliation Task Force was able to organize interviews with groups of survivors from the centers in the southeast, along with the guards who guarded their cells. In these interviews – in which participated the survivors and their guards or the relatives of the survivors and the guards - the following objectives were completed:

1. Investigation of the circumstances surrounding the forced disappearances and the accompanying mistreatment.
2. Creation of a list of the detainees in these centers, including the survivors and those who died.
3. Determining of the dates of the deaths and the places of burial.

The interviews were also allowed the Task Force to identify the most important realities surrounding the forced disappearances in these centers:

- The complete denial of the violations by the public authorities throughout the entire process.
- The practice of forced disappearance against 62 prisoners belonging to the groups that participated to the two failed coup d'état and who were sentenced by court, while others of the same group were not brought before justice.
- The duration of forced disappearances varied between one year and 16 years in the cases of those held in Agdez and Kalaat Magouna, but reached 18 years for those held in Tazmamert and 19 years for the Oufkir family.

The Task Force also visited burial sites in order to determine the precise dates of death of those buried, and proceeded to the identification of the tombs following the systems used by the guards of the prisons in burying the dead bodies.

The Follow-Up Committee continued the investigations with the help of forensic science experts.

Those cases studied concern the period from August 1972 until July 1991. The total number of victims of forced disappearances in the three centers is 394, among them 98 women. Of the 394, 92 died while imprisoned, among them three women.

(pg. 108)

➤ 4.2.4. Those who died in Agdez and Kalaat Magouna:

The Task Force had nine meetings with officials from the Ministry of the Interior, and visited Zagoura, Agdez, and Takounit between March 24-26, 2005, to verify the burial sites of those who died in the Magouna center. On April 16-18, 2005, it also carried out investigations in conjunction with the local authorities of Ouarzazat, Agdez, Zagoura, and Magouna, which allowed it to review the civil registry of the city of Agdez and confirm the deaths and their dates. It also heard testimony from former officials and agents of the auxiliary forces who were responsible for guarding the Agdez center.

After verifying the places of burials, the members of the Task Force performed three rounds of the Agdez center in the presence of witnesses who participated in the burials or witnessed them. The latter confirmed the death of 32 people, including three women, who died during their imprisonment and were buried in two areas that were separated from the rest of the tombs of the Agdez cemetery. The first area contained 11 tombs, and the second 21 tombs.

The Task Force determined the approximate dates of the deaths, which allowed it to identify each burial site and place a tombstone on top of it.

The Follow-Up Committee has continued its investigations to determine the identity of those buried in the tombs, enlisting the help of forensic scientists and genetic analysts.
